Key Findings

1.

There is a clear hierarchy in the total amount of picks by position. Secondary, offensive and defensive line, wide receivers and linebackers, running backs, tight ends, and finally quarterbacks.

This makes sense as it reflects how many players at each position a team needs. Teams tend to only have two or three QBs on a roster while often having 10 or more secondary players.

The first round tells a different story. Quarterbacks and defensive line get a massive bump while linebackers and running backs take a hit.

0 1st Round RBs in 2024

4.

This reflects the value of players position as well as the ability to find talent later in the draft or through other means. Running backs, while valuable are extremely abundant and it is rather easy to find a serviceable or above average one. The same cannot be said for Qbs and defensive linemen.

Key Findings

1.

The SEC and Big 10 dominate the draft. Teams like Alabama, Ohio State, and LSU far outpace the rest of the nation.

134 Picks from Alabama
9 of the top 10 from B10 or SEC

2.

In terms of first round production the story is much the same. Alabama has an even more firm hold on the first place spot and the SEC shows considerable prowess when it comes to the top picks.

47 1st Round Picks from Alabama
4 of the top 5 from SEC

3.

Looking at specific positions the SEC dominates the more athletic positions such as WR and the secondary while the Big 10 shines when it comes to the bigger players.

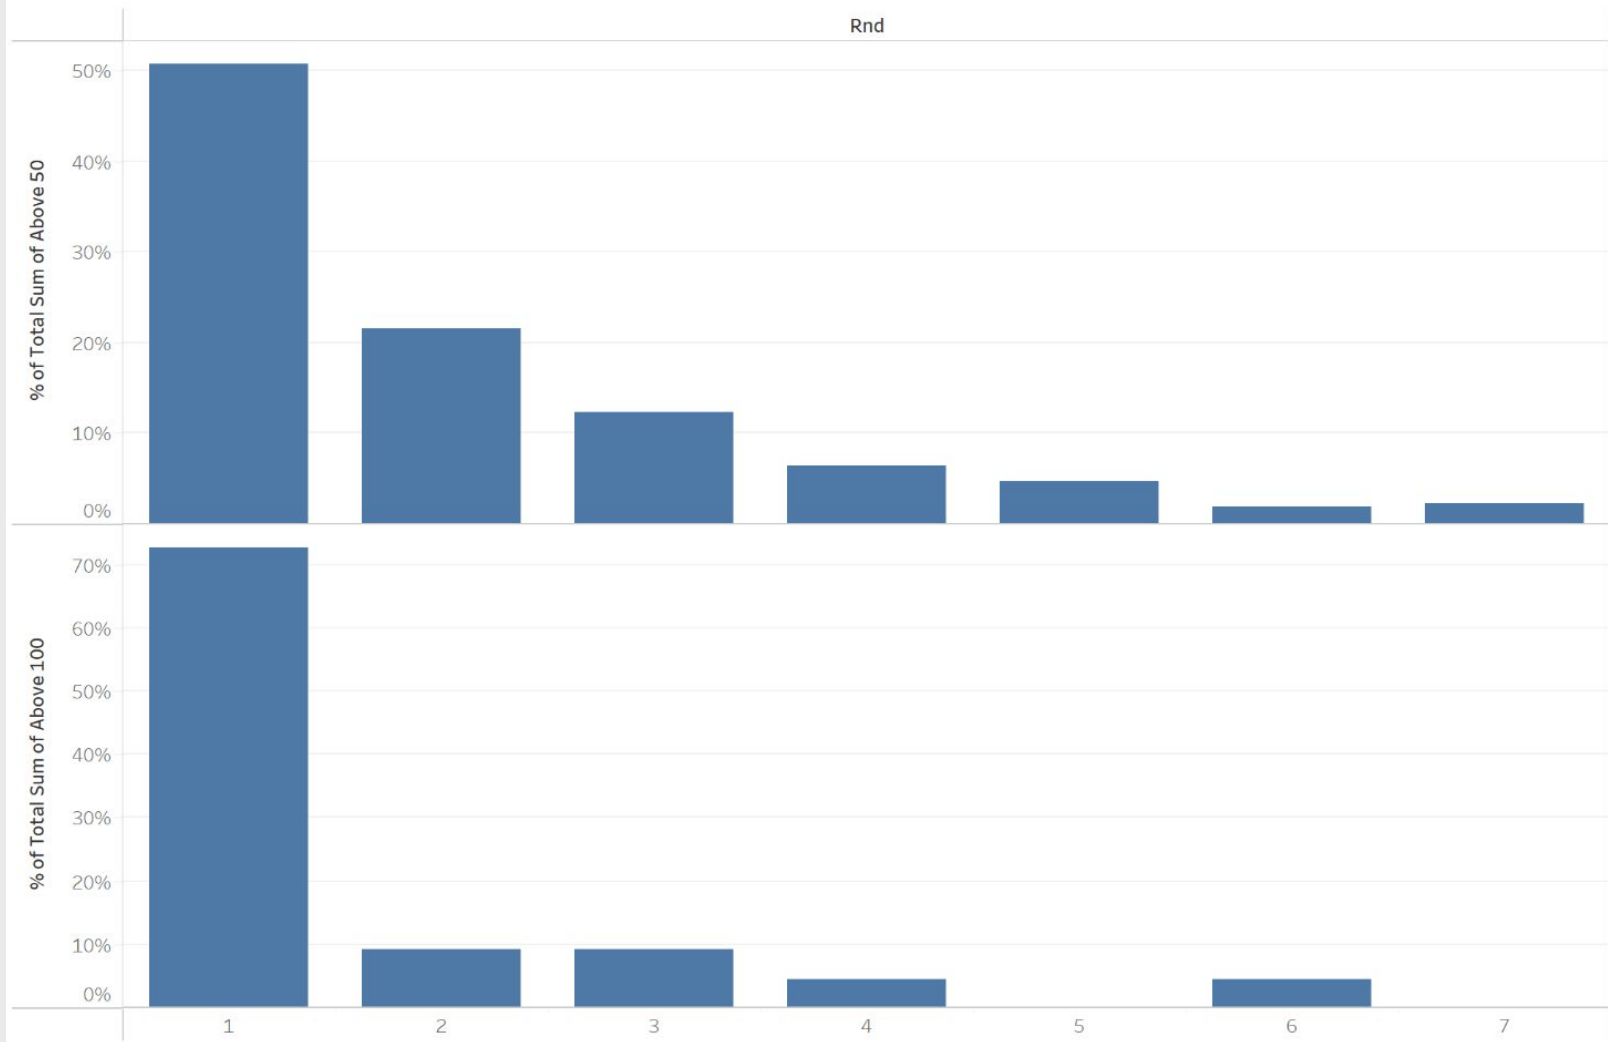

45 Linemen Picked from OSU
20 WRs Picked from LSU

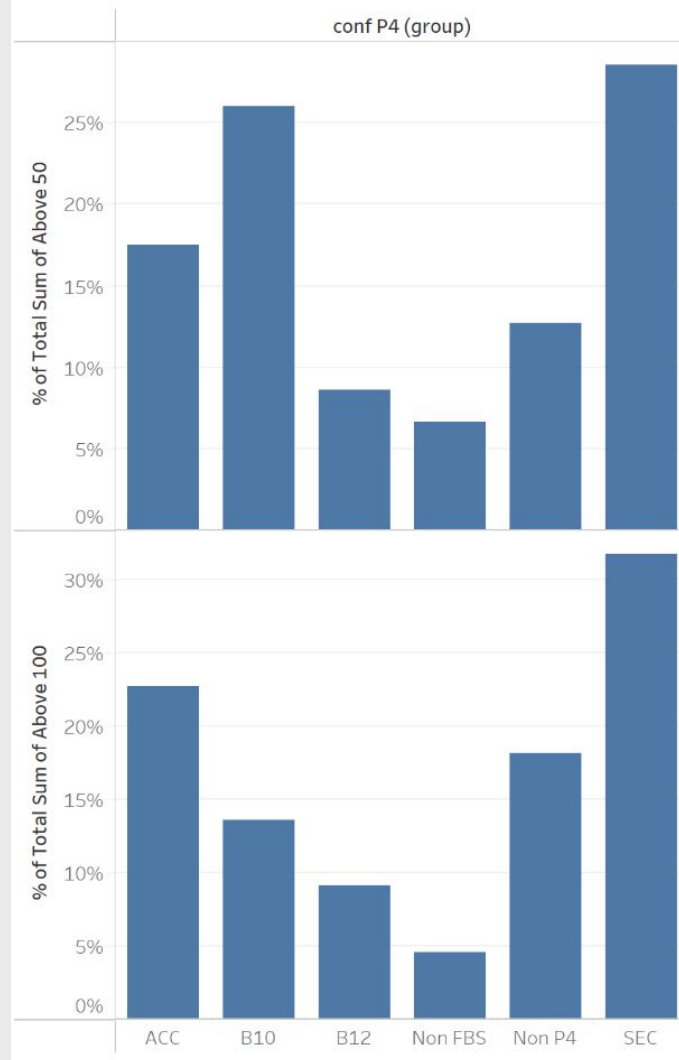

4.

Quarterback is much more of a toss up with no school or conference clearly standing above the rest however there are a few notable findings.

4 1st Round USC QBs
3 QBs Picked from NDSU (non-FBS team)
